Healthy Communities Milwaukee Regional Summit: The Converging Visions of Public Health, Community Development and Criminal Justice

Tuesday December 2, 2014, The Italian Conference Center, Milwaukee

Overview

When Milwaukee's individuals and neighborhoods falter, it is rarely for a single reason. Poverty, mental illness, addiction, and incarceration all threaten our community. This means that different groups and agencies – specialists in public safety, public health, medical treatment, community and economic development – often focus on the same individuals and neighborhoods in overlapping work.

We come together at the 2014 Healthy Communities Milwaukee Regional Summit because we believe that the better we collaborate, the more effective our work will be. By coming together, we can:

- Understand each other's priorities, and the processes used to set them
- Learn about each other's successes and challenges
- Brainstorm the opportunities to be found in collaborating across sectors
- Start and continue the face-to-face relationships that form the basis of strong collaboration

This summit will be a beginning for some and a continuation for others, but not an end. Key groups involved with these efforts have made a substantial commitment to continue working on the ideas underlying the summit. Our planning for 2015 is already under way.

Agenda

Today's conference is presented in three parts. The first part features perspectives at the convergence of public health, community development, and criminal justice. The second part spotlights how this convergence already is working well in several Milwaukee neighborhoods and explores how to build on successes and lessons learned. The third part looks at where we go from here and offers an agenda of future collaborative work into 2015.
